

Liberation Tour

During the dark days of the Second World War the Channel Islands were the only part of the British Isles to be occupied by enemy forces. Guernsey was invaded in June 1940 and remained under the jackboot for almost 5 long years until finally being freed a day after the rest of Europe on May 9, 1945. Come with us and see the results of those long years of subjugation in the form of a massive construction project undertaken by the forces of the Third Reich to make Guernsey a 'Festung' or impregnable fortress. Built mainly by slave labour, the grim bunkers and gun emplacements will help you to understand the reason why islanders still celebrate Liberation Day with such joy.
